R.

R, the seventeenth letter of the Latin alphabet, bet, corresponds with the Greek rho (P, ρ). On account of the aspirate which always accompanies the Greek letter, we find it represented by rh in some words derived from that language. The letters r and s seem to have been interchangeable to a great extent, as in arbor, arbos; honor, honos; quæro for quæro; hesternus, from heri, etc.; r is also assimilated with l, as in the diminutive Hbellus from liber, in intelligo from inter-lego, etc. For abbreviations in which R is used, see Table of Abbreviations.

S, the eighteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding to the Greek sigma (Σ, σ, ς), sometimes representing the Greek aspirate, e.g., sex = ἑξ; sal = ἅλς; serpo = ἑρπο, ὑρπο = super. It is occasionally interchanged with t (as innersare, pulsare, mertare; pultare), and r (as honor and honos). The poets of the older period often elided s before a consonant, e.g., vita illā dignū loquere; by assimilation, s before f becomes f, as difficilis; it often represents another consonant which has been assimilated to it, as jubeo, jussi (for jubsī), cedo, cessi (for cedasi), premo, pressi (for premsi), pando, passum (for pandsum). For abbreviations in which S. is used, v. Table of Abbreviations.
